Renewing Strength: When Life Shames Us

Most all of us have felt shame as children, students and adults. Some grew up in families where shame was prominent and powerful. Our sexuality is often rooted in shame. We feel shame when we have disappointed someone we care about (or ourselves). Addiction tends to feed shame.

Jesus might confront people with direct and hard questions, but He always respected that all people were created in the image of God. He didn't label people as "tax collectors and sinners" but saw people as people. Jesus really fought with the religious people who tried to shame others. Jesus called them names not used to "win friends" or influence enemies.

Of all the statements in the New Testament, there might be nothing more shocking to a person in that culture than this sentence, "Jesus stretched out his hand and touched him..." Lepers were NEVER touched. But Jesus didn't deal with people like anyone else did. He was (and is) His own man.

Something to Think About:

There are "untouchables" among us, too. They may be homeless panhandlers, of the opposite political party, of a different religion (or lack thereof), of a different lifestyle or income. They may have mental or emotional health issues. They may be caught by addiction. They may be firmly nailed to their past identity. There are people who require "extra grace." Who is an "untouchable" in your life? Have you ever felt like an "untouchable" yourself? What was your source of strength? How does Jesus help you see yourself and others as being loved and accepted?

Bibles and Blessings CELEBRATION

TODAY

Bibles and Blessings is an annual celebration to present around 70 Bibles to Kindergartners. The children can bring the Bible along with them on Sunday morning to their AsburyKids classrooms. We pray this Bible will be used by the family with their child on a daily basis so they grow in their faith as a Christian and start to learn how to help others follow Jesus.
